Tip: The text tools of Photoshop are just as easy to learn as any other tool. When you learn how to move objects with the tools, you can apply that skill to text. The text tools are covered at length in Chapter 3. Photoshop is a huge program. The more features and tools you activate, the more difficult it can become to navigate through and use. You can see how Photoshop has matured by looking at how the menus and interface have changed over the years. The current version of Photoshop is the CS6 Update, which is now in its first public beta. Learn more about using Photoshop in the new version at www.adobe.com/creativecloud. Photoshop has a document interface. You get started with your first image by using the Image New to open an image in Photoshop's default editing environment. You see the Image Browser — the basic storage location for your images — and the files. As with any computer program, you start with a default workspace, which includes the tools and functions you need to edit your image. ## The Photoshop Workspace An `_image editing workspace_` is where you do the actual image editing. The `_workspace_` is a Photoshop document — that is, a digital page. You see this page when you open an image with Photoshop. You open a file in the workspace by using the Image New command. After you open an image, you perform your editing in the workspace. You can see your image on the workspace as a preview in the `_hand_` tool in the top-left corner of the image. You can hide and display the image by clicking the eye icon next to the preview thumbnail. When you hide the image, you see the background on the canvas. When you show the image, you see an image thumbnail on the canvas. However, if you change any settings in the image, that image no longer appears on the canvas. See the later section "Image Settings" for more information about the features of the document workspace. * * * # A word on using a monitor The changes in your image will not be reflected in the monitor until you apply an image adjustment to the photo. To change the size of the text and other elements in an image, you must first select the text in an image. After you select the text, you see the size options appear in the ruler above the text. Young research visa The International Visitor Leadership Program at North Carolina State University (IVLP) hosts international scholars for extended visits at NC State. The program provides international scholars with funding to conduct research at NC State during the first year of their postdoctoral stay in the US. This program is designed to foster international relationships at NC State while enhancing the quality of research conducted by international scholars at NC State. Scholars are selected through the global pool of applicants to be of particular interest to the host institution, and NC State must approve the scholarship. Visits are designed to last up to one year. The international scholars will be affiliated with faculty in the Department of Public Health or the Department of Population, Family, and Reproductive Health in the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. The international scholars will share the costs of the travel and lodging they incur during the visit at NC State. It is the visitor's responsibility to secure other forms of financial support. These forms of financial support must be independently verifiable and documented. A personal contact from the host institution (a college dean, a program director, a department chair) is required to approve the visa and to request the funds be paid from the university budget. In the first year of the program, NC State awards the visitor scholar with a fellowship equal to the fee to pay for the service of an NC State faculty member for one year. After completion of their visit, the international scholar agrees to return to their country of origin to work in their research field upon expiration of the fellowship (the scholar must return no later than the year after their visit). The purpose of the fellowship is to fund a research visit to NC State so that an international scholar can conduct further research on a topic of their choice. Research projects are selected by the international scholar and can be in any area of science, technology, public health or other academic fields.
